

CASE STUDY

Empowering a software provider with Azure

When Mavim wanted everything to come together, it was time to Intercept.

About Mavim

A game changer in re-inventing operation models

Dutch software provider offering transformation platform

Helps organisations digitalise their businesses

Headquartered in Amsterdam, operates in 27 countries

Serves over 1 million end-users worldwide

THE CHALLENGE

Turning history into future success

For Independent Software Vendors (ISVs) who are not born in the cloud, legacy and history can be both a benefit and a significant burden.

The upside is of course the fact that compliance with industry specific requirements are easily met. However, the downside of a lacking adjustment to a cloud-based model often results in a lack of flexibility and increased difficulty in scaling an organisation.

Both of these issues Mavim faced were of huge importance to digitally savvy customers in an increasingly demanding marketplace.

Mavim had to move to cloud in order to offer their customers a more scalable and flexible solution, which at the same time would not compromise compliance and regulatory requirements.

THE SOLUTION

The world at your fingertips

Intercept offered its Azure suite to combat the issues of scaling and agility.

After careful assessment of their client's software, Mavim were able to outline an implementation plan within 5 business days.

Intercept's Azure allowed for a more flexible approach worldwide, as well as an easily manageable way of scaling globally, something that was of utmost importance to Mavim.

THE RESULTS

Turning flexibility into a rock solid foundation

As a result, the company is now able to deploy and distribute their software across multiple locations around the globe - with just the click of a button.

This eliminates the need to re-design and re-configure the software every time a new deployment is required.

The solution provides greater control to Mavim, saving both time and money. Their customers now enjoy a faster and more efficient deployment.
